Sustainability

Designed by UNStudio and engineered by Werner Sobek, Wasl Tower sets a global standard in sustainable design.

The building incorporates solar panels, reflective glazing, and a smart heat pump system.

The tower boasts the region's tallest ceramic façade, adorned with inclined ceramic fins made from renewable materials. These fins provide shade, enhance wind-induced cooling, and channel daylight into the building, reducing perimeter zone lighting energy by 40 percent. The tower's unique geometry and shape reduce wind loads by 20 percent, ensuring efficiency.

Solar thermal panels produce hot water, while bronze-coated reflective glazing ensures excellent thermal performance. The combination of ceramic fins and reflective glazing significantly lowers cooling loads, reducing overall energy consumption.

Wasl Tower represents a sustainable haven where architecture meets environmental responsibility, embodying a promise of a brighter, greener future.

Design

Wasl Tower is a mixed-use landmark along Sheikh Zayed Road that twists in a contrapposto-inspired form.

Inside, a seamless vertical boulevard of terraces, sky foyers, and shared amenities introduces a sense of rhythm and continuity throughout the tower. Guided by advanced parametric design, its sculptural form engages with the city from every angle, shaping spaces that transition fluidly between interior calm and outward views. This ascending sequence of open volumes invites exploration and exchange, offering residents and visitors an experience that captures the expressive essence of Wasl Tower's design.

The tower's façade features one of the world's tallest ceramic surfaces, adorned with angled fins that provide shading and reflect daylight deep into the interior. Facade lighting, powered by photovoltaic panels, animates the structure after dark, creating a rhythmic visual connection to the city.

Dubai Icon

Wasl Tower is designed to be more than a building. Its twisting, sculptural form introduces fluid motion to Dubai's skyline and responds directly to Sheikh Zayed Road. Inspired by the classical contrapposto pose, it combines art and engineering in a way that is instantly recognisable.

By day, it stands as a striking landmark. By night, hidden façade lighting transforms it into a beacon, animated rhythmically to celebrate events and welcome visitors, with energy supported by photovoltaic panels.

The tower reflects Dubai's core values of innovation, sustainability, ambition, and human centric design. It sets a benchmark for future high-rise development in the region.

As a mixed use destination, it brings together offices, residences, a Mandarin Oriental hotel, public amenities, terraces, and landscaped outdoor zones. It becomes a place where culture, innovation, and experiences converge.

Wasl Tower is a true landmark for Dubai, a symbol of the city's ambition, transformation and constant motion.
